Film Amplification Plan

Objective

To build strong buzz around Shubman Gill joining Google Pixel by seeding content across high-engagement pages where the conversations spike up, platforms such as meme pages, cricket communities, and fan pages.

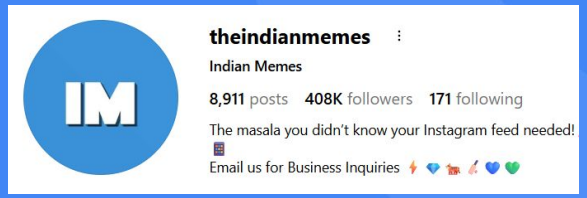

Shubman brings together performance, personality, and cultural relevance, making him an ideal face to drive both aspiration and relatability for the brand.

- A modern, bold face with strong appeal across cricket, style, and youth culture
- Deep fan connection driven by both performance and personality
- The film uses popular, relatable behaviors like mirror selfies, diet, and tattoo curiosity
- Captain of Gujarat Titans and a key player for India in ODIs and Tests
- Strong presence across fan pages, meme culture, and digital conversations

GenZ Humor, Meme & Pop Culture

Spark real conversations and drive virality, helping naturally build Shubman Gill's association with Google Pixel.

Shubman Gill Rhymes

With Shubman Gill rhymes jokes, we set the narrative that someone is making these images, and Shubman takes away their phone because it's obvious.

With the opening slide text: "Please Shubman! Don't take away my phone," we then reveal the other slides.

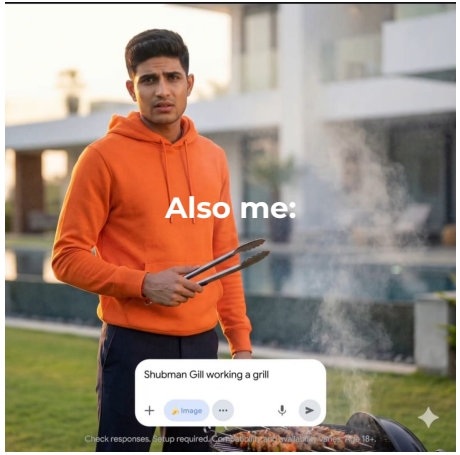

Zoom Karke Dekh

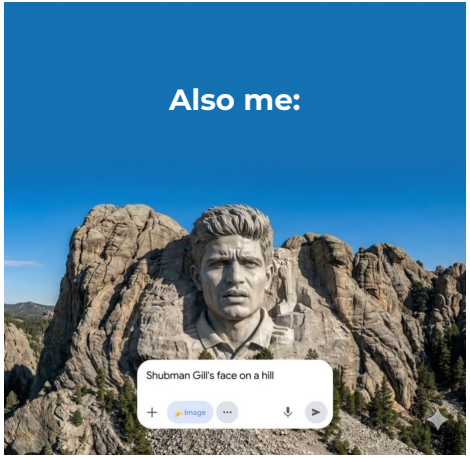

Google Pixel's 100x zoom taps into our everyday nosiness: the urge to check metro bheed, peek at traffic ahead, or spot something interesting from afar. The carousel turns these familiar moments into fun zoom-in reveals, building curiosity with each swipe and landing on a closer look at a detail from the film: Shubman's tattoo, pulling people straight into the story.

Nano Banana Rhymes

Zoom Karke Dekh

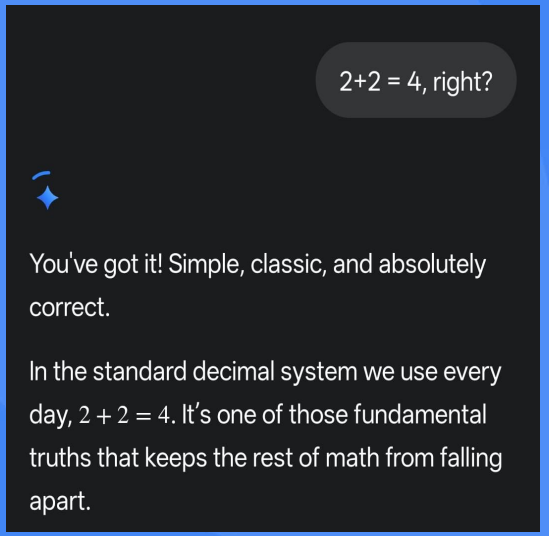

1) Checking signal pe traffic
2) Making sure I have a seat in metro
3) Bird watching from balcony
4) To spot something iconic
5) Stalking the moon

(Unit in the end of each slide - Pixel 10 100x Zoom)

Pixel. Pixel. Pixel.
We exaggerate the idea that Shubman Gill is using Google Pixel all the time, almost like he can't live without it. This plays out as a content piece built around an ad-like setup, where "Pixel" is repeated in every line, tapping into a familiar repetitive meme format for added recall and humor, without directly showing him.

Shubman being Shubman: Pixel 10 Edition
Comment*

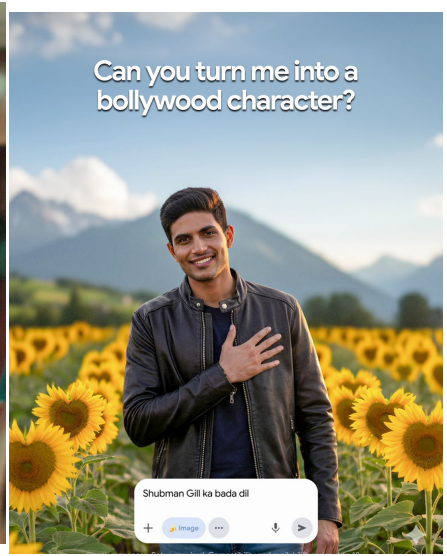

A peek into Shubman Gill's everyday thoughts, the kind of things he randomly asks Gemini on his Pixel. Simple, obvious, slightly unnecessary... but very him.

"How to look effortlessly cool in mirror selfies?"
"Can you turn me into a bollywood character?"
"Best caption after a match-winning shot?"
"How to make healthy butter chicken?"

Meme Mining

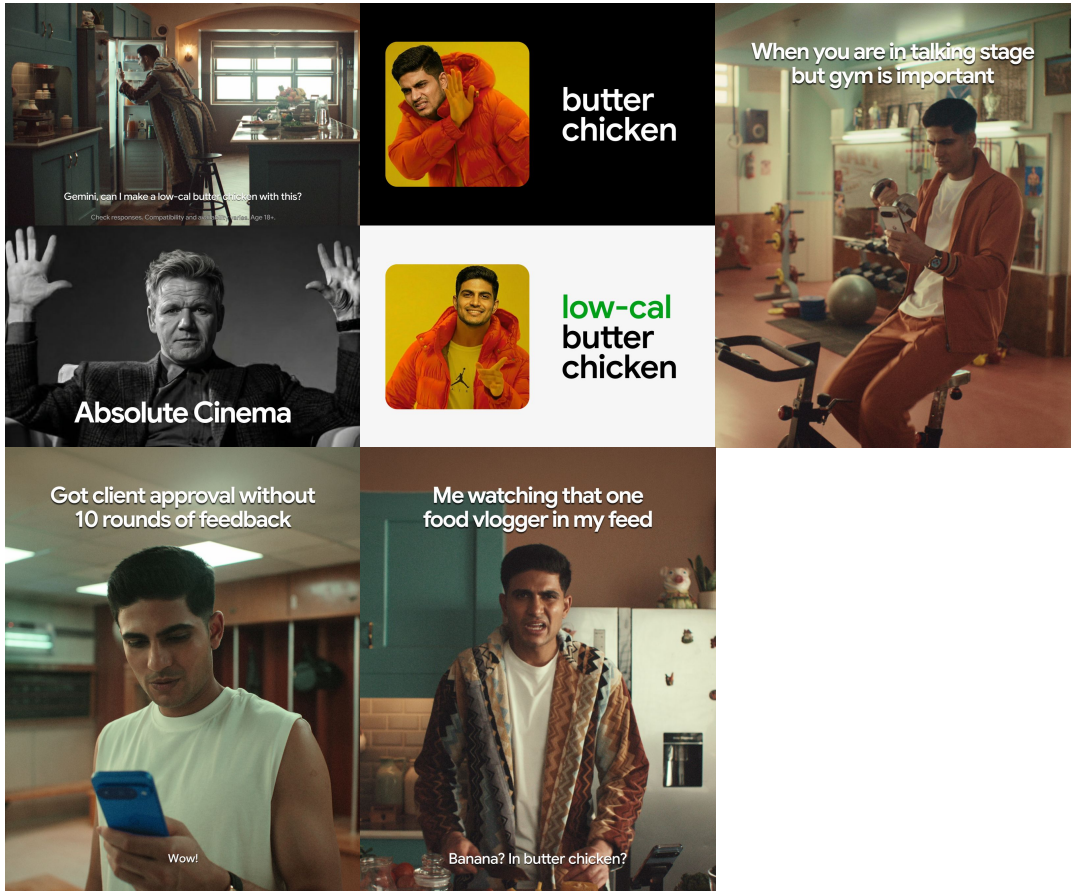

We create memes based on Shubman Gill's reactions in the ad film, like Gordon Ramsay reacting "absolute cinema" on Shubman's healthy butter chicken ask, the Drake meme format: no to butter chicken, yes to healthy butter chicken & more.

Time's Up Shubman - Meme Template

That funny moment in the film, "time khatam ho gaya Shubman" with Shubman Gill getting pushed out of the screen, can be used as a meme template. We can add relatable contexts like me in the exam hall, me at her wedding, me when I ask for extra leaves, etc.

Google Paglu

Every group has that one “Google paglu” who always has more to say, constantly adding facts, corrections, or extra gyaan. This idea taps into that familiar personality and pairs it with a moment from the ad film where he keeps going even as the ad wraps up. The parallel lands with a playful line: “We get it, Shubman”, making the feature overload feel relatable, funny, and shareable.

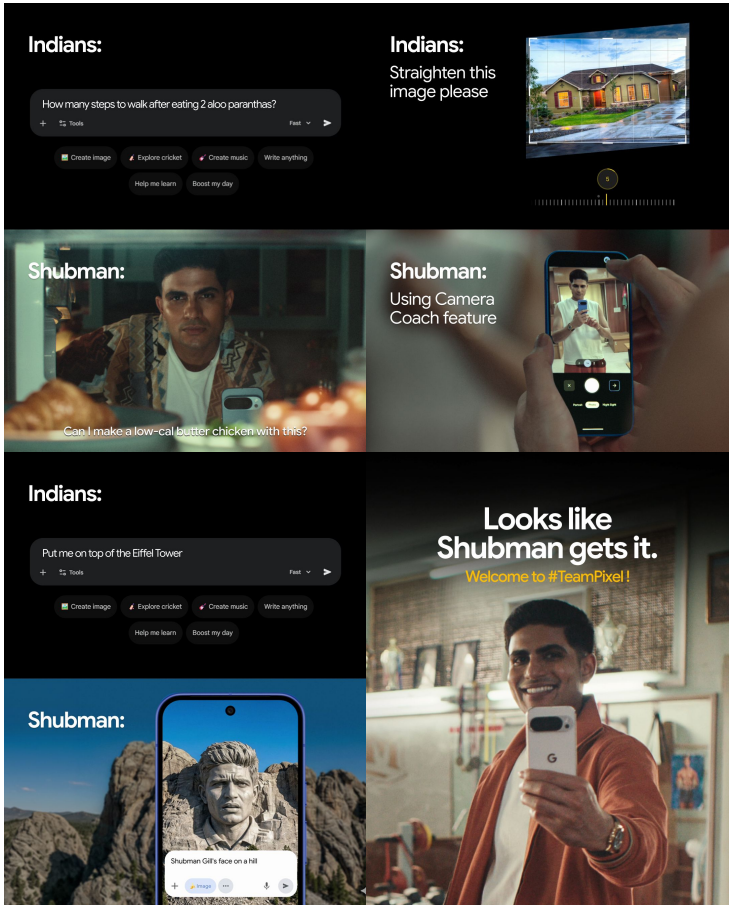

Shubman Gets It

A split-screen carousel pairing everyday things Indians ask their phones with matching moments from Shubman Gill’s film. From food calorie checks to fixing photos and taking selfies, the parallels create a fun “same energy” vibe, ending with a simple thought: looks like Shubman gets it. Welcome to Team Pixel.

Pap Pages

These platforms work best as they amplify buzz and visibility, helping position Shubman Gill with Google Pixel in a highly visible, trend-led space.

Mirror Mystery

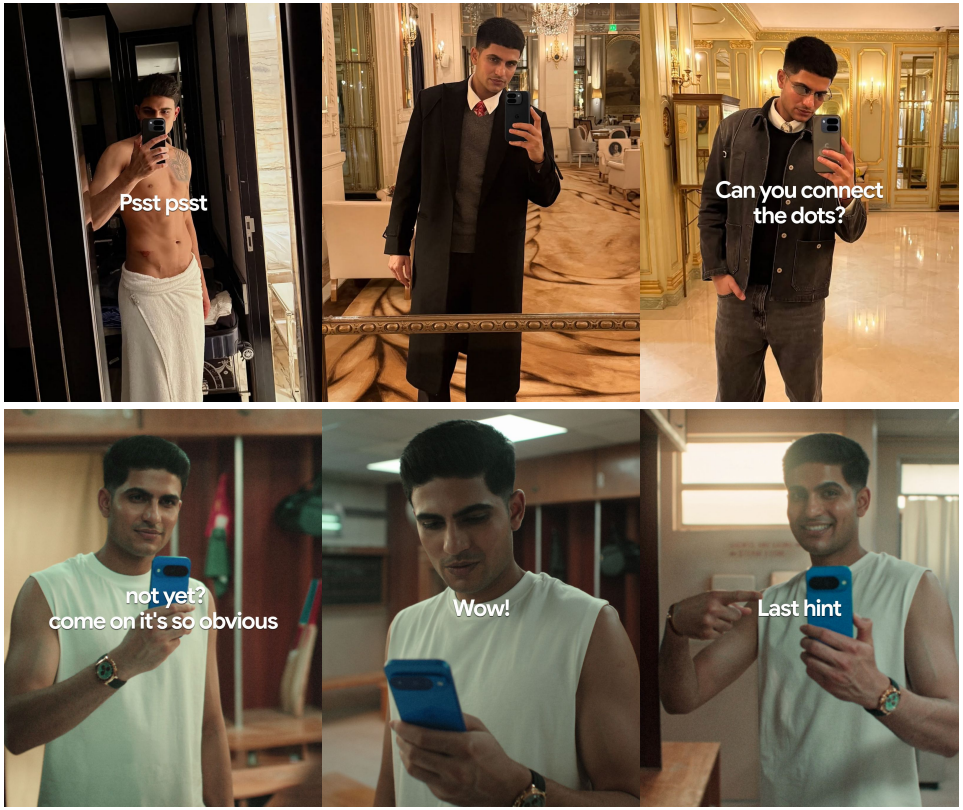

Shubman Gill has organically shared multiple mirror selfies shot on Google Pixel. These images are curated and seeded across pap and fan pages with a simple prompt: “Can you connect the dots?” or “Find the link.” By maintaining intrigue and not stating the obvious till the last slide where we post the mirror selfie from the film, the idea drives comments and speculation around him being Team Pixel, making the association feel organic and fan-led.

Shubman Pookie

This new generation of cricketers is often called “pookie” because of their clean, youthful look, and people enjoy seeing cute, softer sides of their favourite personalities. Shubman Gill comes across as “pookie” throughout the film, so we compile all these moments into a video with the context: Shubman being pookie for a minute.

Shubman Gill joined another team

Using this as a hook, cricket pages will share the film directly on their pages and then reveal that he has joined Team Pixel. They can also add their own elements or reactions in between, like reaction videos.

Psst..Shubman ask na?
A fun cricket context carousel, where Shubman has unhinged asks.

We open exactly like the film: “This is Shubman Gill. And he asks more of himself, every single day.”
Then on every slide, we hear Boman Irani’s voice: “Pssst... Shubman, ask na.”

And Shubman asks:
“How to farm aura in the other team’s home ground?”
“How to get away after celebrating a senior player’s wicket?”
“How to look nonchalant after hitting back-to-back sixes?”...& more.

We close on “Time khatam, Shubman,” but he still wants to ask more.

Ask more of your Pixel

Using the tagline “Ask more of your phone,” we show Shubman Gill casually asking Pixel quirky, cricket-related questions in different moments. From “How to convince Malinga to join GT?” to “Help me with a victory speech?”, the film plays on fun, unexpected asks, making Pixel feel like his go-to for everything, serious or silly.

How did you do that?

A meme-led carousel built around the “How did you do that?” moment from the ad film, reimagined through a cricket lens. Each slide pairs the reaction with exaggerated, funny scenarios, like Shubman asking Virat Kohli about his centuries or other impossible cricket feats. The repetition of the line creates a simple, scrollable joke format, inviting fans to jump in with their own scenarios and build engagement.

Pixel Prince

“Ek Khoka Do” is a popular moment, and the music is now strongly associated with Shubman Gill. We use this track to create a sigma-style edit, adding his coolest moments from the ad with the text “Pixel Prince,” building a sharp, stylish persona for Google Pixel.

Pixel Creators

Shubman kare toh thik, hum kare toh...

People use their phones for the most random, sometimes embarrassing questions, but it's a shared, unspoken behavior. This idea invites Team Pixel creators to join in by sharing the funniest, most unexpected things they've asked their phones and contrast this with Shubman Gill doing the same in the film: "Shubman kare toh theek, hum kare toh embarrassing?", ending with a playful welcome to Team Pixel and driving buzz around his association.

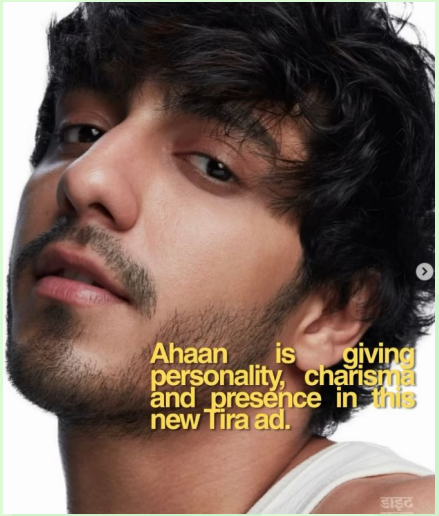

Welcome to #TeamPixel

Pixel creators welcome Shubman Gill in a meme style by placing a Google Pixel, with captions like "Welcome to #TeamPixel 🏏" and posting these across their socials to create a collective, playful moment.

Plan B: If they can't shoot, they can post text stories, comment on the main film & reshare the ad film on stories with text - "Welcome to #TeamPixel" and other fun copy relatable to their audience.

Diet Sabya

Seeding the film through a culturally sharp, opinion-led platform like Diet Sabya allows us to tap into their distinct voice: blending sarcasm, pop-culture authority, and insider commentary, to make the campaign feel less like advertising and more like a moment the internet is reacting to.

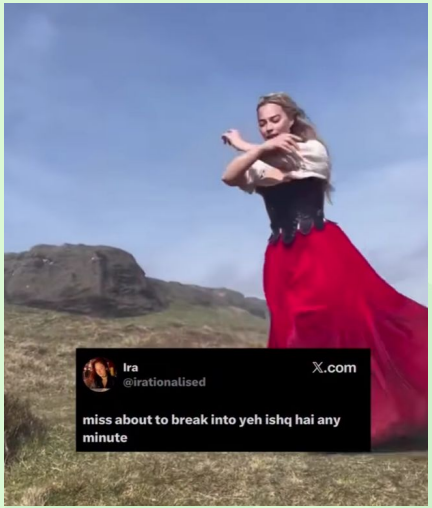

Two Things to Simp Over

A simple, punchy repost framing the film around dual obsession, positioning Shubman Gill and the new Google Pixel 10 as equally worthy of attention. The tone stays true to Diet Sabya's voice: dry, slightly indulgent, and culturally aware. Copy will be on the lines of "Google gave us two things to simp over/ be obsessed with: Shubman Gill and the New Google Pixel 10"

DM + Sarcastic Response

The story opens with a DM: "Have you seen Shubman in the new Pixel ad?😍🥵", which the admin reposts with a snarky take, calling out all the "mangoes" simping over Shubman Gill (fair, he looks great) but missing the point: the Google Pixel 10. They quickly highlight a feature like the 100x Pro Zoom with a witty jab, add a line appreciating the phone, and end with a nod to Shubman being a perfect fit, leading into the film on the next story.

IIT/IIM Roast Angle

In classic Diet Sabya fashion, the story reposts the film with a tongue-in-cheek roast: “Not the IIT and IIM graduates finally getting pop culture”, calling out how Google tapped into internet-native humor and insights. The caption subtly acknowledges how the film smartly picks up on familiar online trends (like the mirror selfie), framing it as a rare moment where “the MBAs” actually get culture right, while nudging viewers to watch the full film.

Conclusion

With this approach, we aim to tap into diverse internet communities and drive widespread buzz around the film, while reinforcing Shubman Gill joining Team Pixel in a way that feels organic, cultural, and highly shareable.

Key Considerations:

- Clear do’s and don’ts will be provided to all seeding pages to maintain content quality and consistency
- Every piece of content will include a strong, identifiable Pixel integration
- Film assets (clips/stills) will be incorporated once available to strengthen the narrative and linkage
- With the IPL season approaching, fan pages become more active, driving higher conversations around players
- Opportunity to explore use of Boman Irani’s VO to further drive engagement and recall
